THE WORSHIP OF THE HORSE. One of the elrongest arguments against the theory of poisoning is the strange fascination which the personality of a successful facehorse exercises on the minds of the lade in a training-stable. They talk of the horse incessantly, bet on him, and when he wins, almost worship him. They would groom him all day for nothing, allowed to do so, and not and spoil him in the process. His prestige grows with each successive victory, and a horse which, like Orme, has as a two-year-old won races worth over £1:,000, and has only once been beaten, becomes simost a present deity.
